Think Different

The value of reading/resource list technology in better integrating libraries in online learning environments.

Carl Grant, Associate Dean/CTO, University of Oklahoma Libraries
Tamar Sadeh, Director Discovery and Delivery Strategy, Ex Libris Group

The Agenda

1. How OU Libraries strategic plan shapes our development efforts
2. Frustrations w/reading lists & online course management systems
3. What do we (students/staff/faculty/librarians) want from a solution?
4. Achieving better integration of libraries w/online course management systems using resource lists.

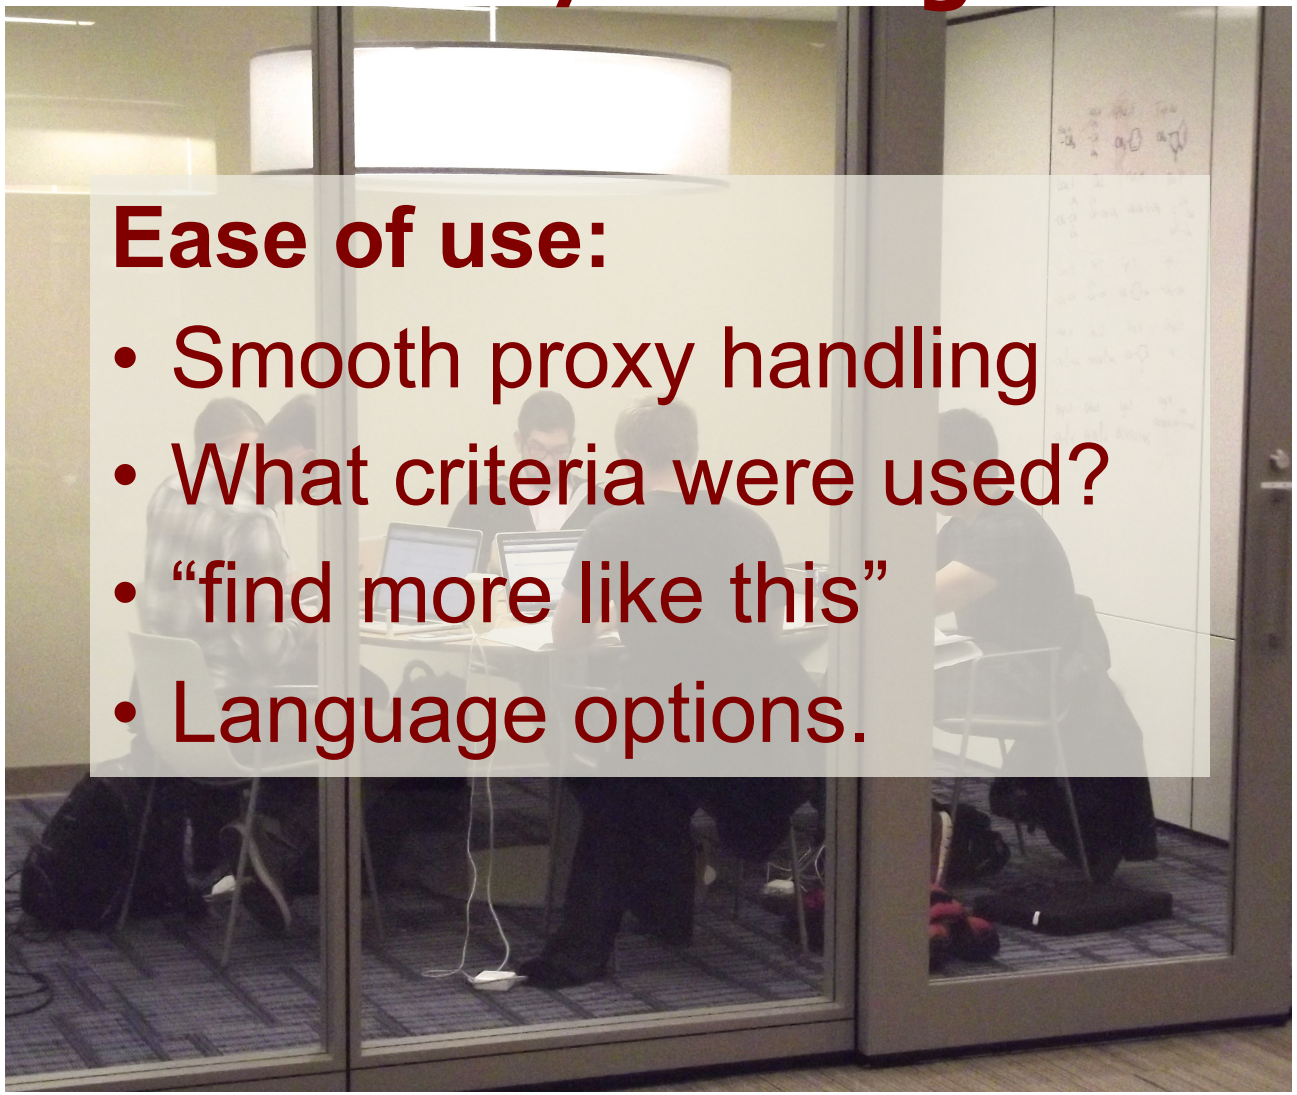
Frustrations?

http://stockmedia.cc/computing_technology/index.html#9

http://quartz.syr.edu/rdlankes/Presentations/2014/CNYSchoolLibraries.pdf

What do students want from a resource/reading list?



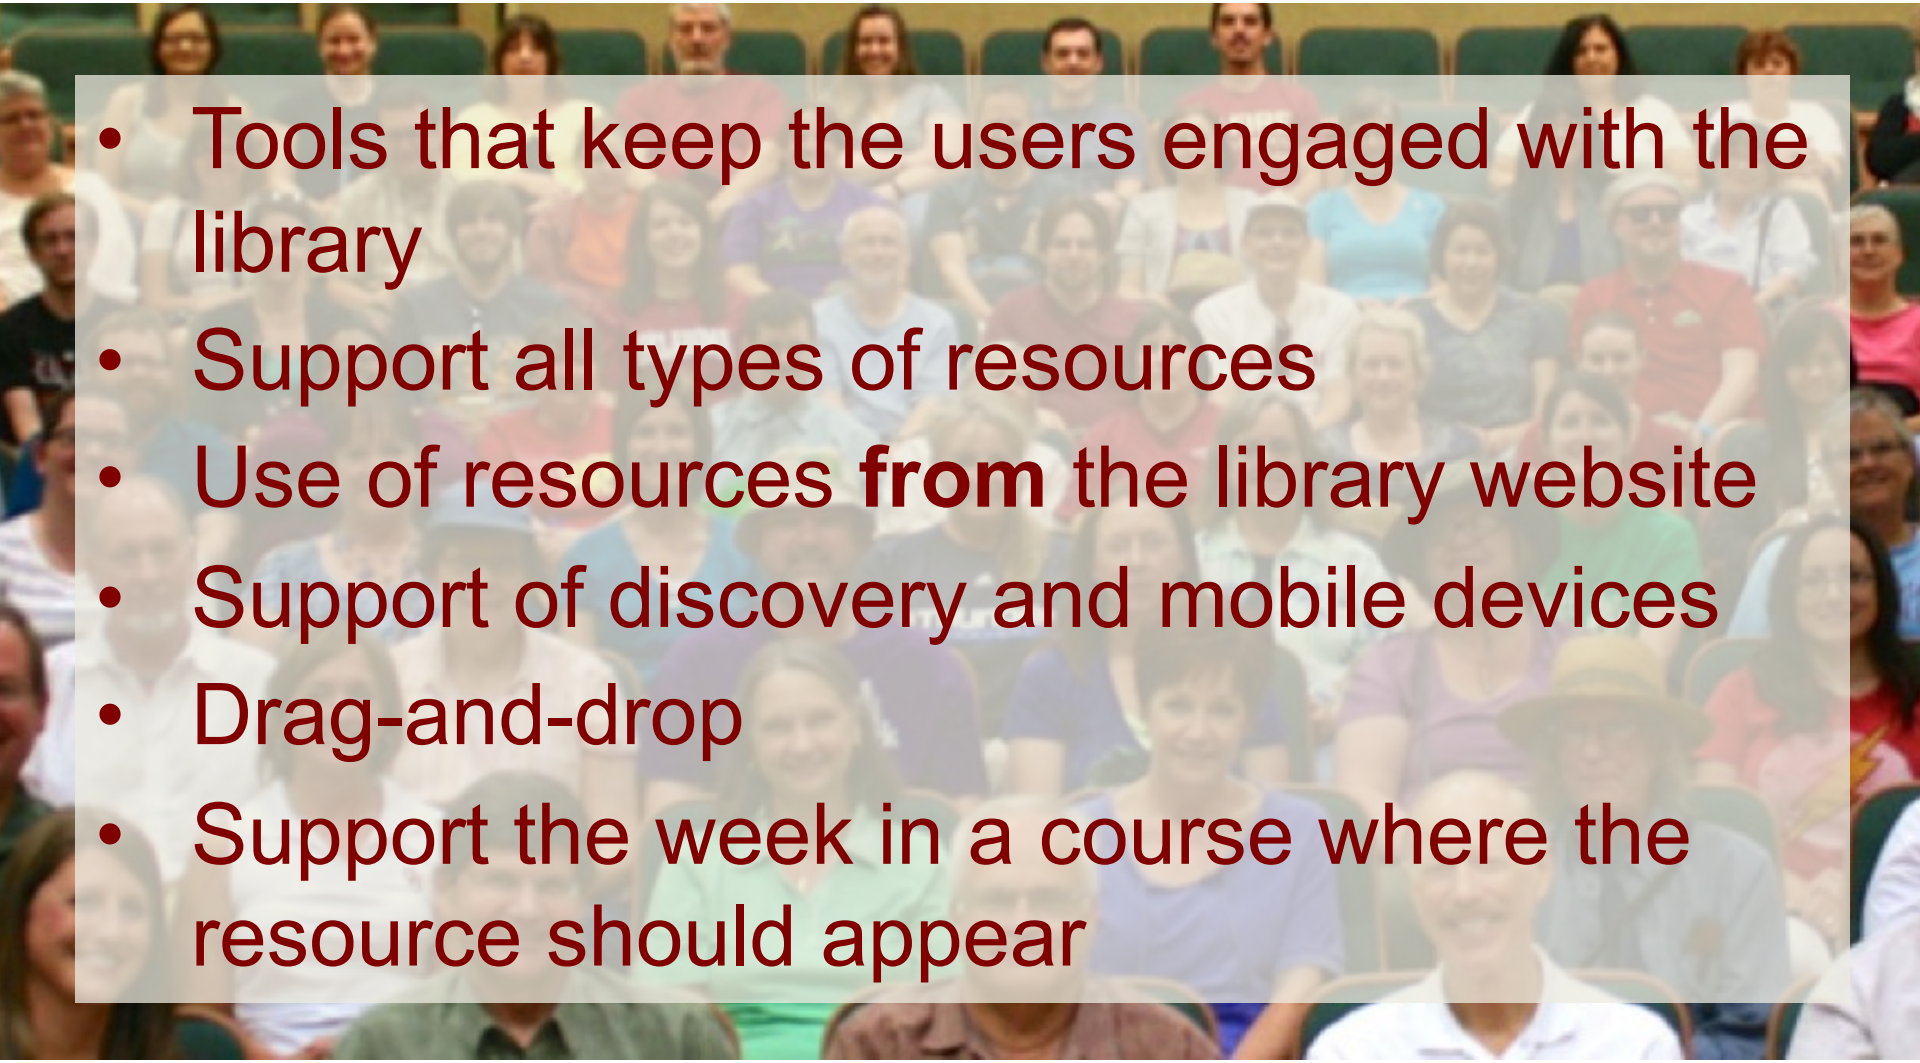
Ease of use:

- Smooth proxy handling
- What criteria were used?
- “find more like this”
- Language options.

What do faculty want from a resource/reading list?

- Ease of use
- Building a list must be simple
- Ability to load all types of resources
- Copyright management
- Good statistics
- Smooth integration with the Library's Discovery tool
- Ability to reorder lists by many criteria

What do librarians want from a resource/reading list?



- Tools that keep the users engaged with the library
- Support all types of resources
- Use of resources from the library website
- Support of discovery and mobile devices
- Drag-and-drop
- Support the week in a course where the resource should appear

What do librarians want from a resource/reading list?

- Link in our recommender system
- Ability to share lists
- Help us identify subscription items to drop
- Support for user evaluation of resources
- Better reporting/analytic capabilities
- Point-of-view support?

Thank you!

Think Different! The Value of Reading-list Technology in Better Integrating Libraries in Online Learning Environments

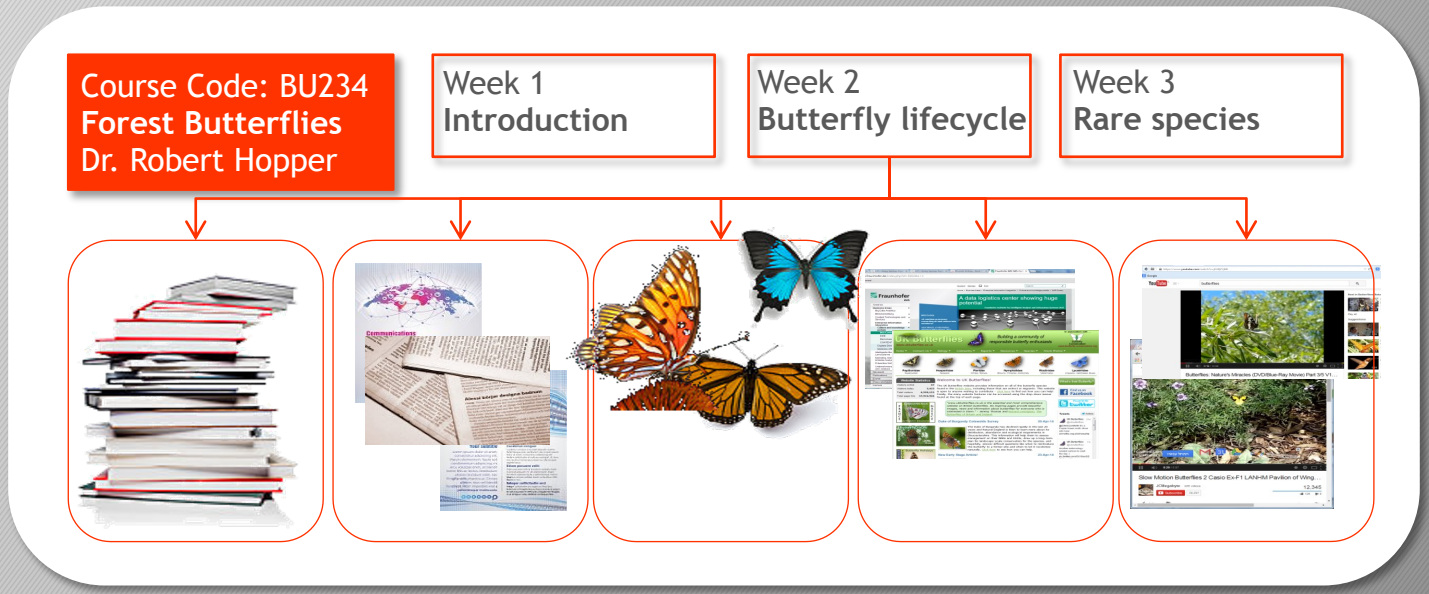
What are resource lists?

Course materials that an instructor assigns to the course or to a specific part of it (e.g., week or topic) and students need to read (watch, or listen to)



© Ex Libris Ltd. 2015

ExLibris
The bridge to knowledge

Current challenges with resource lists

- Complex and disintegrated processes to create them
- Manual work required, year after year
- Often, instructors bypass the library
- Copyright clearance is sometimes ignored
- Usage information is not always logged
- Non-traditional materials are transparent to the library
- New teaching methods, such as massive open online courses (MOOCS), require new practices

© Ex Libris Ltd. 2015

The bridge to knowledge

Rethinking the role of the library in teaching and learning

The library is looking for ways in which it can be more involved in teaching and learning

- To better support instructors and students
- To ensure the proper use of materials
- To optimally develop the library collections
- To measure and demonstrate the library's value to the institution

Ex Libris Leganto

- Serves instructors, students, and librarians
  - Instructors create, maintain, evaluate, and share resource lists and monitor their use
  - Students access materials, share their views, and suggest additional materials
  - Librarians make materials available through the library management service and track their use
- Tightly integrates with the course management system, the library management service, and other relevant systems and services
- Supports cross-system workflows
- Offered as a cloud-based service

Core design principles

- Streamlined workflows for the instructor and the library
- Friendly and engaging user interface, across devices, for instructors and students
- Innovative services, such as automated recommendations for other, relevant materials
- Contemporary sharing and collaboration capabilities among instructors, students, and the library; for example, item-related comment thread and options for suggesting new materials

The bridge to knowledge

Leganto for the library and for the institution

Leveraging Alma and the integration with other systems in place, Leganto enables the library to:

- increase efficiency and save costs,
- extend its reach and be more apparent to students and faculty,
- introduce new materials to instructors,
- facilitate proper handling of copyright,
- optimize the use of its collections and further develop them to best support teaching and learning,
- and demonstrate the library's value to the institution.
